International Relations II: The Politics of International Economic Relations

Professor: Komori

Prerequisites: MC220 or college approval

COURSE DESCRIPTION:

MC 221 is the second semester of a year-long introduction to the study of international relations. Building upon the concepts and theories covered in MC 220, this course examines alternative approaches to international political economy (i.e., the politics of international economic relations). The goals of the course are: 1) to obtain analytical skills to understand the changing political dynamics of international economic relations; and 2) to develop problem-solving skills to analyze major problems and formulate policy responses to the major issues in the field of international political economy (IPE).

Typical Readings:

Evaluation

Short papers, a longer research paper, midterm and final exams, presentation, and class participation.

MC 331 : Encounters with Post-Communism
Professor: A. Borcila
Prerequisites: ((MC 230 or MC 231 or MC 220)or approval of college) and completion of Tier I Writing

DESCRIPTION OF COURSE:

With the events of 1989, the once “impenetrable” and monochrome “Cold War Other” exploded into visibility. Post-communist sites entered the American cultural and political landscape through the television screen as places where “history is happening”; subsequently, they became spectacles of crisis (orphans, ethnic violence, poverty, nationalism, human trafficking). This interdisciplinary course offers the tools and strategies to inquire into how post-communist countries are represented, how knowledge about them is produced, how “we” are positioned towards “them,” and what the real consequences of this representation, knowledge production and positioning are. We will examine media (primarily television news and film), tourism, literary, and scholarly representations. We will investigate American representations of post-communist “Eastern Europe” as well as representations produced by authors and media from the region. Some of the questions that we will be asking include: how is post Cold War “Eastern Europe” mapped and remapped; how is communism represented (imagined and remembered) in American and post-communist Eastern European cultural productions; how is “Eastern Europe” differentiated from “the west” in these representations, and how does this differentiation contribute to defining both American and post-communist identities; how does media participate in framing American encounters with post-communist “Eastern Europe” and in framing the remembering of the communist past?

While our specific focus is on representations of post-communism, the course means to contribute more generally to your understanding of the factors that shape and structure cultural encounters. Thus, our theoretical readings and our analysis of representations will offer us the opportunity to query the relationship among discourse, power, and knowledge; the politics of cultural representation; the impact of media on cultural encounters; the relationship between lived and mediated experience; and the cultural politics of memory and remembering.

You should expect a strong theoretical component in this interdisciplinary course as well as an emphasis on collaborative learning.

Typical Readings
Maria Todorova, Imagining the Balkans
Slavenka DraKulic, How We Survived Communism and Even Laughed
Eva Hoffman, Exit Into History
Mckenzie Wark, Virtual Geographies
Edward Said, Orientalism

SPRING 2014

MC 362: PUBLIC INTERNATIONAL LAW

Professor Mark Axelrod

Prerequisites: MC220/221 or college approval

DESCRIPTION OF COURSE:

Public international law regulates interactions between countries, building upon the concept of sovereign state independence. The principle of sovereignty allows states to operate unconstrained within their own borders, subject to certain limits. Legally speaking, such control can be narrowed only by consent of the state’s government or violation of widely accepted norms. This class provides a wide-ranging introduction to public international law, focusing on tensions between legal commitments and national sovereignty. Throughout the semester we will explore areas in which this friction is most evident, with special attention to the conditions driving states to follow their legal responsibilities.

During the first half of the semester, we address the design and sources of international law, and the conditions under which they apply. Following the midterm exam, we explore a variety of issue areas, starting with rules on the use of force across national borders. Limitations on the use of military force follow directly from the notion of sovereign state independence, and serve as the basis for most other international law provisions. Once we clarify the conditions under which military action is legally acceptable, we will focus on laws regulating the conduct of war and governments’ behavior towards their own citizens, as well as the punishment of individuals who violate these rules. While the laws of war restrict border incursions, other international legal provisions are designed to solve collective action problems such as unfair trade practices and access to limited natural resources. These relationships are often handled by private actors, but we will explore the rules constraining state behavior in this realm. The course concludes by examining the broader international legal system and concerns raised by it.

ASSIGNMENTS: Class participation, judicial decision brief, discussion and written work addressing one recent or ongoing international dispute, midterm exam, and final exam

DESCRIPTION OF COURSE:

This course provides a comparative and critical examination of the political thought of selected black radicals and conservatives in the United States, as well as Africa and elsewhere in the African Diaspora. Our conversation will be informed by the following questions: What does it mean to be a black radical and is black radicalism interchangeable with black nationalism, whether in the United States or elsewhere in the African Diaspora? What does it mean to be black and conservative, and is black conservatism a viable theoretical and practical alternative to black radicalism? Is black political thought, whether conservative or radical, no more than warmed over Americanism?

MC 384: METROPOLITAN SOCIETY

PROFESSOR: LOUISE JEZIERSKI

DESCRIPTION OF COURSE:

This course explores the significance of urban and suburban life in American society. How has inequality between cities and suburbs developed? Are those who live in poor, inner city neighborhoods afforded full citizenship? Does suburbia represent the ideal democratic community? How has American urban policy abetted the decline of American cities? Can we achieve greater integration and diversity in our communities? Are our cities worth saving? We explore in depth the uneven development and spatial segregation by social class, race and ethnicity, and gender in American metropolitan areas. New fragmentation and segregation patterns have emerged with deindustrialization and post-industrial restructuring. The interdependent processes of urban decline and the social composition of the suburb will be examined, using, in particular, the cases of Detroit, Los Angeles, Chicago, and New York. The course covers the history of American urban policy and current debates in urban and community redevelopment. The issues of globalization and postmodernism and urban life are explored.

An interdisciplinary perspective is emphasized using readings from urban and community sociology, urban history, geography, economics, and cultural studies. We examine how social inequality is organized spatially and how identities and opportunities are forged in community politics. Analytic skills are developed as we compare urban theories and evaluate urban policies. Students will learn demographic and economic census analysis, qualitative analysis using urban ethnography and in depth interview, and cultural analysis. The course will encourage debate over policy choices, the importance of community organization, assessment of structural forces versus political agency and participation, and the measure of social justice that converge in urban issues.

READINGS:

EVALUATION:
Seven short (3-5 pages) analytic essays are due throughout the semester. In addition, a semester-long census exercise requires students to provide a population and economic profile of Lansing or Detroit. A class tour of Detroit and/or Lansing is arranged. A final short research paper on a contemporary urban policy is required.

MC 387: JEWS AND ANTI-SEMITISM

Professor Kenneth Waltzer

Prerequisites: Completion of a Tier I Writing course

DESCRIPTION OF COURSE:

MC 387 is a comparative history course that focuses on Jews and anti-Semitism especially during the 1930s-40s, the pivotal decades of modern Jewish experience. It explores the history of anti-Semitism in Europe and the West from medieval Christendom to the Modern era, and also examines contemporary developments in the history of anti-Semitism. It probes the sources and dimensions of the Nazi Holocaust, including the path of Nazi policy to genocide, and European and European Jewish responses to the Holocaust in the ghettos and camps. It also explores aspects of the global response to the Nazi Holocaust, including the American response. Primary concerns include comprehending the rise of modern racial anti-Semitism and the new anti-Semitism which has risen in recent years; the role of Nazi ideology, hatred, and other factors in the path to the Final Solution during the 1930s-40s; the responses of witnesses and of victims to Nazi genocide, including life beyond extremity in the Nazi camps; and the reactions of bystander nations and communities.

TYPICAL READINGS
Laqueur, The Changing Face of Antisemitism
Friedlander, Years of Extermination
Snyder, Bloodlands
Friedrich, Auschwitz
A Holocaust memoir from a list of choices (Auschwitz)
Wyman, The Abandonment of the Jews
These books are subject to change and substitution by newer ones....

EVALUATION
Two papers, final exam, and participation. An approved paper on a specialized topic can be substituted for final exam.

H-option: An honors seminar with five meetings focused on issues of "New Directions in Study of the Holocaust and of Antisemitism." Honors students read an additional book, or selected other readings, and present to a seminar. No additional paper.

ADV TOPICS IN PUBLIC AFFAIRS: POLITICS OF IDENTITY, IDEOLOGY, AND GENDER IN MUSLIM CENTRAL EURASIA

Professor: Timur Kocaoglu

DESCRIPTION OF COURSE:

The term Muslim Central Eurasia comprises roughly the Tsarist Russian territories of the various Muslim peoples (in Crimea, Volga-Ural, Caucasus, and Central Asia) and refers to the rise of modernism, nationalism, and reform movements (Jadidism) from the mid-nineteenth century down to the Soviet period. This course will examine and compare various movements, political organizations as well as the politics of identity, ideology, and gender issues in the three major periods of Central Asian political history: the pre-Soviet (from mid-19th century until early 1920s), the Soviet (early 1920s to 1991), and the post-Soviet (1992 to present). It will provide the students the basic information to understand and compare the politics of the pre-Soviet period with that of the Soviet (1920-1991) and the post-Soviet (1992-present) periods that have introduced new and sometimes drastic changes in the political, economic, social, and cultural lives of the Muslim Central Eurasian peoples. The students will have a chance to study and debate internal (domestic) political and gender issues such as steps toward democratization or authoritarianism in this region. Students will be given an opportunity to develop critical reading and writing skills and practice in defining a research agenda. The ultimate goal is to increase the awareness and understanding of the students to the politics and culture of this region the importance of which has been increasing in the global context.

CULTURAL DIMENSIONS OF PUBLIC AFFAIRS: Women and the Politics and Poetics of biblical Interpretation
Professor: Ilana Blumberg

DESCRIPTION OF COURSE:

This course is about women in the Bible, women scholars and writers on the Bible, and the Bible itself. We will study the founding narratives of the Book of Genesis, focusing on the representation of women in relationship to each other, to men, to God and history. To help us consider these subjects, we will turn to some of the most creative and scholarly readings that women have offered in the last twenty years. In reading these recent interpretations, we will be able to reflect on older, influential assessments offered by male scholars and note the innovations at hand.

We will thus be involved in both the ancient past of the biblical stories and our own contemporary world where the Bible continues to inspire and undergird a wide variety of spiritual and political positions.

MC 482 : GENDER AND VIOLENT CONFLICT

Professor Linda Racioppi

DESCRIPTION OF COURSE:
From all-male and male-dominated armies to the heroic masculinization of combat, from systematic rape campaigns to the policing of sexual relations, violent conflicts throughout the world are deeply gendered. An emerging scholarship has documented the profound gender consequences of wars, conflicts and their resolution. This course is designed to review some of that scholarship and to explore specific cases of violent conflict, war and militarization, addressing the theoretical contours, social, cultural and political dynamics, and policy implications of gendered conflict within and between states. It draws on a wide range of disciplinary perspectives and genres (from social science analyses to history, memoir, and film).

Senior Seminar in International Relations: Transnational Relations for a Cause: Advocacy Networks, Civic Groups and Social Movements
Professor: R. G. Pinto

DESCRIPTION OF COURSE:
This senior seminar analyzes cause-oriented action in transnational relations, with emphases on advocacy, organizing, mobilization and resistance. It examines the origins and outcomes of transnational activism. Careful thought is given to specific tactics of activism across borders, research methods, and international relations (IR) more broadly.

Activism between two or more polities is committed to causes including independence, social justice, democratization, labor, environmentalism, pacifism, religion, health, human rights, ethnic or gender equity, and poverty reduction. We will focus on the transnational activism of advocacy networks, civic organizations, social movements, and defiant weak actors who resist. Well-known examples of these sorts of activists, respectively, range from the Climate Action Network to Transparency International; from Doctors (or Engineers) Without Borders to the National Rifle Association; from the global justice movement to al-Qaeda; and from whistleblowers to wildlife poachers.

While our semester will begin and end with pre and post surveys of transnational activist relations taken together, steady attention to methods for research on activism will fill a comprehensive toolbox that will strengthen research projects produced as capstones for the seminar (and IR major). In the early part of the term we will assess the theoretical lenses that have been used to view transnational activism from various angles. In this initial phase we will learn, for instance, to view transnational activist entities at once in five distinct ways: as infrastructures for change; non-governmental, non-profit, civil-society, public-interest or third-sector organizations; social movement organizations; everyday disorganizations; and protest businesses or social enterprises. During the bulk of the term we will concentrate on transnational activism while extending our consideration to both its upstream origins and downstream outcomes. Sampling varieties of cause-oriented action across borders, we will disaggregate this activism into at least ten specific types of tactical modes on five distinct spatial scales of transnationality. Generalizing to broader IR questions through numerous geographic and issue areas, we will also bring the tactical repertoire to bear on themes such as globalization, state sovereignty, normative change, multilateral cooperation, governance, and domestic-foreign frontiers.

Sample books:

Evaluation:
Classroom participation, three rounds of discussion facilitation, research project (in four stages), presentation of research project, peer reviews of research projects, and two exams.

MC 492 – SECTION 003

Senior Seminar in International Relations: Water, Energy and Commerce: Resource Scarcity, Sustainable Development and Environmental Impacts

Professor: Norm Graham

DESCRIPTION OF COURSE:

This seminar will examine comparatively the experience of states undergoing rapid economic, political, and environmental change since the collapse of the Soviet Union. It will provide an interdisciplinary analysis of the progress made and challenges faced in post-socialist era Europe, Russia, and the other successor republics to the former Soviet Union. It will also examine the impact of the socio-cultural context that may influence both the course of the debates and the feasibility of alternative policy strategies in a changing and increasingly interdependent global economy. An important focus will be on the comparative analysis of natural resource challenges and conflicts, particularly as they relate to the energy-water nexus.
One of the most pressing issues in the world today is the involuntary movement of people, of ‘displaced persons’. Whether wrought by natural disasters, such as the tsunamis or earthquakes, by war or ethnic conflicts, or by policies towards urbanization or development, displacement is often linked to human suffering, and always connected to national and transnational geopolitics. Not surprisingly, scholars in a wide range of fields have noted the importance of ‘seeing’ displacement: they recognize that visual images and narratives not only elicit emotional responses from a general populace, but that the production and circulation of such images and narratives are inextricably linked to policies and actions taken within the global arena. As such, these scholars challenge us to understand the constitutive relations of geopolitics and visuality differently; to understand it not only as the social construction of the visual field but as the visual performance of the social field (Campbell, 2007; 357).

This section of MC 493 examines the ways in which displacement and ‘displaced’ persons—material bodies and subjectivities—are constructed, circulated, and regulated in and across the social field. To this end, we will ask questions such as: What is ‘displacement’? How is displacement constituted materially and discursively? What are the dominant technologies (or modes) employed in producing knowledge about displacement? Who has access to such technologies? Can displaced groups engage in this production? Here contemporary cases might include the movement of people internally and across borders as prompted by conflict or environmental issues. Cases will be concerned with multi-dimensionality of experiences of displacement (e.g. human security). In exploring these questions, we will draw from a range of fields, including anthropology, political philosophy, cultural geography, and visual studies; and, across a range of genres, such as policies papers, ethnographies, and documentary film. Most importantly, students will draw on their areas of expertise beyond CCP (e.g. specializations) to construct theoretical or practical models to address issues of displacement and displaced bodies.

SENIOR SEMINAR IN SOCIAL RELATIONS:  MIDDLE CLASS POLITICS AND POLICY IN THE U.S.
Professor:  Louise Jezierski
Prerequisites:  MC 380 and completion of a Tier I writing requirement

DESCRIPTION OF COURSE:

This senior seminar course is a research based capstone for Social Relations and Policy majors. The course will be conducted as a cooperative and interactive learning environment where all participants are responsible for attendance, readings, and presentations. Our first task is to become familiar with key definitions and concepts used in dialogue with various disciplines. Who is the middle class in the United States? How has this social class been variously constructed over the years? What is the promise of the middle class for Democracy in America? We will study the interaction of social agency, ideology, opportunity structures, conflict, domination, normative order, political economies, cultures, and social movements in creating communities and achieved or ascribed social identities associated with the middle class. How middle class status is linked to gender and race is also emphasized. In contemporary American society, the future of the middle class seems endangered. This course hopes to chart some of the larger forces which are challenging and shaping traditional roles and identities of the middle class, creating new inequalities and entitlements, and forging new political agendas. How does U.S. policy shape the Middle Class? Participants will demonstrate their facility with these analytical tools in a presentation of original research on a topic of their choice.

Required Texts:

C. Wright Mills,  White Collar: The American Middle Classes, 2nd ed.
B. Bledstein, R. Johnson,  Middling Sorts: Explorations in the History of the American Middle Class
Annette Lareau and Dalton Conley (eds)  Social Class: How Does It Work?
Karyn R. Lacy,  Blue-Chip Black: Race, Class, and Status in the New Black Middle Class
Richard Florida,  Rise of the Creative Class & How It’s Transforming Work, Life, Community, And Everyday Life  (2nd ed.)

Film:  “A Raisin in the Sun” by Lorraine Hansberry
Film:  “The GI Bill of Rights”

Assessment will include 3 major components: discussion, position papers on the readings, and a final research project and 25 page final paper.

Discussion participation and Discussion Leadership required by all (10%)
Ten 2-3 page position papers (50%)
Research Paper proposal (feedback but ungraded), Annotated bibliography (10%), power point presentation (5%) and final 25 page research paper (25%).

MC 498—Section 002

SENIOR SEMINAR IN SOCIAL RELATIONS: THE AMERICAN DREAM

Professor: J. SYKES

Prerequisites: MC 380 and completion of Tier I writing requirement

DESCRIPTION OF COURSE:

The ideology of the American dream - the belief that prosperity awaits those willing to work hard - resonates powerfully today. Yet where did this national ethos originate? What were - and are - the central tenets of this dream? This course examines the persistence of this promise that predates the founding fathers and evaluates the success of the American dream - who has been able to realize this dream, and importantly, who has not? How is this potent concept of the American dream evoked politically today? Topics in this course will highlight the continuing importance of this ideology and the barriers to the promise that economic opportunity is open to all. Readings highlight social mobility trends and opinion poll research, theories on the reproduction of social class, and ways media and social policy reinforce or challenge the American dream.
